1. Supply

Plant import, production and trade

The plants come from selected growers, both at home and abroad, who produce especially for us. The nurseries are visited by us regularly to evaluate production and growth. This is how we guarantee a healthy and high-quality products.

Why Landscape with native plants?

A native plant is an indigenous plant species of a given region. This includes plants that occur naturally or have existed for a long time in an area. Gardens have long been a way to get closer to “nature”, which has been interpreted over the centuries in different ways. Throughout garden history, all over the world, exoticism has always been a driving force. Today, a new trend has emerged and this drive has given way to a desire to reconnect with “authentic nature” as part of the nostalgia for lost natural landscapes and a general quest for nature experiences. Traditional landscaping attempts to create a landscape that “looks” the same regardless of location. Nature landscaping, in contrast, emphasizes selecting the plants that grow naturally at the site. Since native plants evolved to grow under local conditions, they do not require that the site be changed. They do not need the life support of watering (except during establishment) or chemical inputs. Beautiful in its own way, sustainable, healthier for the homeowner and easier and less expensive to maintain, landscaping using native species is proof of a commitment to the future.

A 'green' supply chain

Nursery and Plants Co. takes corporate social responsibility seriously and we continue to take into account the impact that our activities have on the environment. We do this, among other things, by reducing our energy and water consumption and by taking responsibility for the use of pesticides. But we don't make the world that little bit greener on our own – we inspire our chain partners to join us in achieving this goal.

In addition to the quality of the products that we buy, we believe it is important that our suppliers grow or produce their products with respect for human health, animal welfare and the environmental impact. That is what we call ethical and sustainable purchasing. Together, we are making steps towards a green chain – from production to customer.
